Vonnegut Jr.

In Breakfast of Champions, Vonnegut vows to “clear [his] head of all the junk,” and race and racism are at the top of his list of “junk” to be cleared. The result is a descriptive and forward, and often offensive, portrayal of race and racism in American society. “Color was everything,” Vonnegut writes. Indeed, color is everything in Breakfast of Champions, and Vonnegut introduces nearly all characters in relation to color.
